April Mowery has always considered herself to be progressive, but her understanding of the world is going to change dramatically. She likes to take these paths in the middle of nowhere. These are paths that are rarely taken and off the maps of those that are not exactly adventurous when it comes to hiking. She knows that she's taking a risk by going off the beaten path in Canada in the Rocky Mountains. She knows that there is no cell service and if she gets hurt that there's no possibility of rescue. She takes precautions, but she doesn't take into consideration the flying thing that comes out of nowhere and scares her out of her mind. She meets up with Avery, a white man that is living in absolute obscurity in a cabin. She doesn't understand why, but she soon finds out that he's hiding a secret that is worth killing for. Can she give him a reason to go on, or is his fate sealed with that of a kiss?
