How to Make Your Video Sound Great: for YouTube, Television, and Film Nathan Wood

If you've ever shot a video with your cellphone or video device for YouTube and it sounds terrible, this guide is for you. This guide will help you through what's known as the "audio post production process" to help get the best sound out of your project. Whether it's for YouTube, television, theatrical release, or something else, I'll show you the best practices for getting great sound for your video. In this book I'll provide brief yet informative overviews on how to record and synchronize your production sound, export sound and video from your editing software for Protools, edit and organize your sounds, reduce unwanted noise and artifacts, fix distortion, equalize, and finally how to mix for delivery. Additionally, I've provided useful links for more detailed information on each topic. If after reading this book and you find yourself overwhelmed and need professional audio post production services, please visit my website www.aqueousaudio.com for information! ?
