How To Live With Someone You Care About Who Is Depressed

Cindy Help, the author has helped people all over the world learn how to handle the difficulties associated with interacting with depressed people. The life-skills you need for coping with a depressed friend, spouse, co-worker, family member, boyfriend, girlfriend, sibling or child are contained within the pages of this Kindle book.

The wisdom in this book will show you exactly how to live with someone who is suffering with chronic or situational depression.

From The Author On Dealing With A Depressed Person

When a family member, spouse or friend suffers from depression, they need all the love and support they can get from you. Your care, encouragement, support and understanding all play a vital role in their recovery. While this is true, it isn't a walk in the park. Living with a depressed person can be very difficult for everyone involved.

If you live with a depressed person and share a fair amount of responsibility in looking after that person day in and day out, it's easy to forget yourself and to neglect your own needs. If this keeps up, you may eventually find yourself burnt out or on the brink of wearing yourself down. Whether you are living with or taking care of a depressed person by your own conscious choice or not is not the issue. What is important is doing your best to deal with it and look after the depressed person while nonetheless knowing how to take care of yourself at the same time. All throughout this ordeal, you must strive to remember that you still matter. Most resources out there focus solely on the depressed person. It's about time someone focused on you.

This e-book is divided into four chapters. The first chapter takes a look at what it's like living with a depressed person. The second chapter focuses more closely on what depression is and isn't to help you understand it better, as well as the signs and symptoms to watch out for when you suspect someone has depression. The third chapter deals with exploring ways to help you deal with a depressed loved one. The fourth and final chapter gives advice on how you can take care of yourself and focus on your needs while looking after a depressed person.

Tips From This Kindle Book About Living With A Depressed Loved One

When you live with a family member, spouse or a friend going through depression, it's very important that you know for certain what depression is and what it isn't. Stick with the hard facts and the science. Believing in and propagating depression myths only makes things worse. Let's get things straight. Here are the most important facts you need to know if your loved one has depression:

- Depression is a serious medical condition. It is a disorder that affects a person's biological, emotional, psychological and interpersonal components. A depressed person does not consciously choose to be depressed.

- Depression is neither a personal flaw nor a weakness in a person's character. It is also not an instance of failure in that person's life.

- Depression is not something people can "snap out of" or turn off like a tap. Depression is a disease, and just as a person with cancer can't "turn off" their cancer or expect to fully recover from it the next day, a person with depression can't do this either.

- Depressed people have an intense need for love and acceptance. They need more than the usual amount of love and understanding from their family and friends. However, in their depressed state, they usually can't reciprocate, so it may seem like they are needy and ungrateful, but they're not. They just need copious amounts of care and attention to help them get through their depression.
